Ephriam Halbert lived most of his married life at Hermitage where he was postmaster and County treasurer. A man honored and respected by all who knew him.

3. Lemuel Amzi Donnell, born, Wilson Co., Tenn., Mar 6, 1839; married, Washington Co., Arkansas, 1967, to Ann (Cunningham) Forsythe; moved with his father's family and other relative to Hickory Co., Missouri, 1841 when two years of age.

He had the advantages of the schooling given by the North Prairie Academy, located in their colony. He served in the Confederate Army, under Col. Sterling Price, from Aug. 20 1,861 to June 21, 1865, being an orderly sergeant. His duties were to see to the moving of supplies of ammunition and food.

After the war was over he settled in Washington, Co., Ark., where he taught school and married.

He moved to Texas, 1875, first stopping at St. Jo; after a year or two there he moved to Palo Pinto County; then in the spring of 1879, with 10 cows with heifer calves, two wagons and teams and two horse colts, Jim and Bob, started to Colorado. They got as far as Seymour, Texas, which was just starting, and there they decided to locate. They built the first stone house in the town, hauling the lumber used from Fort Worth by way of Jacksboro.

He taught the first school in the basement of his own home that was taught in Seymour. He was the superintendent of the first Sunday School there; the first justice of the peace; later one of the county commissioners, as well as other firsts.

Uncle Amzi was an outstanding man of his generation. He was modest, unassuming, religious in actions and deeds as well as in profession.

Aunt Ann had a son, William Forsythe, who went to California where he became a professor in some state intitution.
